No Ordinary Love: “Love Heals” Global Online Campaign
Calls on Love to Unite Humanity During Mental Health Awareness Month

Global Gatherings for Peace & Healing Have United
Hundreds of Thousands of Hearts
Using Mathematically Designed Music since 2011

LOS ANGELES, MAY xx, 2020 -- On May 24th, the #loveheals digital campaign launches with the goal of boosting mental, emotional and physical immunity through the science and healing effects of love. In its sixth edition, the Global Gathering for Peace and Healing will stream live across multiple media and social platforms around the world.

For seven days, waves of love-driven music, messaging, and online social connection will flood the news and feeds of today’s major platforms to shift the narrative and consciousness of our current media landscape.

The campaign culminates on May 31st with the sixth official Global Gathering for Peace and Healing at 11:00AM-1 PST, uniting hundreds of thousands of people in meditation using the proven healing power of love and mathematically composed music.

“May is Mental Health Awareness month and especially during this pandemic, we cannot lose sight of keeping up with our mental hygiene. With many people under social-distancing guidelines and some still in quarantine, now is the time to reach out, check on one another, come together, help each other, and share unconditional love in the ways that we can. Let’s pour our love on social media and become a candle that lights the way for others,” said Dr. Joseph Michael Levy.

Former U.S. Surgeon General under President Barack Obama, Dr. Vivek Murthy, shares a similar perspective. “There’s nothing more powerful than love in terms of its ability to heal. There’s nothing I’ve written a prescription for that eclipses what love can do in the face of extraordinary injury and trauma and pain.”

The #LoveHeals campaign is rising to face the unique global isolation challenge presented by COVID-19, and asking the entire world to respond with the power of love -- kindness, compassion, forgiveness, generosity, empathy and connection -- and healing sound vibration, both of which have been shown by scientific research to have a positive impact on the brain cells and cognitive function, as well as boosting the immune system.

Dr. Sonia Sequeira of Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center, NY, has studied the effects of sound vibration in patients:“Loving and being loved activates a neuro-immune pathway that protects the human heart. In turn, isolation perceived by the body as lack of love, increases inflammation in the body and increases the risk for cardiovascular disease.”

The #LoveHeals campaign is led by global visionary Dr. Joseph Michael Levry in collaboration with other visionary leaders and groups, such as Dr. Beckwith and The Female Quotient, and features a collaborative music video with musicians and personalities, infused with the same mathematically harmonious compositions that Dr. Levry uses in his Healing Beyond Medicine music series, designed to have the greatest possible healing impact on the nervous system, brain and overall health.

Selections from this series have been shown by neuroscientists to significantly reduce pain in children undergoing cancer treatment in a recent study at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York City.

Dr. Levry has successfully used his healing compositions to bring extraordinary healing rhythm and harmony into the hearts and minds of hundreds of thousands of people in five Global Gatherings for Peace and Healing superclasses. His leadership was credited by CNN journalist and host Van Jones who shared a list of authentic and relatable voices that speak to this incredible human experience.
